

a council under the auspices of the Department of Home Affairs which examines films to see whether they should be shown on television or not, and it is called the Film and Publications Board.

In conclusion, we must work hard, with determination and dedication in order to build a true nation that has self-respect, particularly in reviving our families with love so that our children grow up with sincerity and respect. Let us not be like the DP and become chrysalises who do not know where they come from and where they are going to; so said hon Opperman.

We as women should play a role in building this nation, our children in particular. In 1956 we were able to fight against pass laws and we succeeded because we were one. So what can stand in our way today? Even the Holy Book agrees with us. It says that a wise woman builds her house, but a stupid one destroys it with her own hands.

By all of us working together we will succeed.]

Mrs C DUDLEY: Chairperson and Deputy President, moral regeneration sounds good, but what exactly do we mean?

Biblical morality, for example, is diametrically opposed to the morality which is diligently promoted in South Africa.

Humanism now dictates the new South African and new world order. This new order does not seek to restrain and punish evil and to protect good, but seeks to change and reform mankind through laws and policies which, they say, will free us from every evil. The Equality Act, for example, designed to free us from prejudice, entrenches homosexual rights and renders Christians guilty before equality courts for simply quoting the Bible. Poverty, on the other hand, has been addressed globally through population control conventions which South Africa is party to, resulting in measures like CTOP which today has provided for the legal abortion of 230 000 unborn South African babies and pressure on health workers to participate in abortions against their will.

I would like to tell the hon Deputy President that this is a lack of respect for life. Indeed, hon Dorothy, why should our children trust us? HIV/Aids also conveniently contributes to population control, and natural health and antiretrovirals are obviously a spoke in the wheel, while starvation due to land grabs also proved useful in reducing numbers in Africa and ensuring dependency. The gambling and lotteries Act is an ingenious way to divert attention and ensure no real solutions to the curse of poverty.

Solutions to health issues are also very interesting. A euthanasia Bill hovers in the wings ready to help people to choose to end their lives - an innovative solution to old age, Aids, disability and other ailments.

Presently though, abortion, oral sex, masturbation, homosexual lifestyles and condoms pose as life savers, but, in fact, are designed to achieve population targets.

I would like to tell the Deputy President that with regard to moral regeneration this is just the tip of the iceberg. Now anyone, like myself, who opposes the humanist in this plan of salvation by law and liberal policies, is by their definition an evil person conspiring against the good of society. We should not be deceived. Moral regeneration is a smoke screen. It is simply a call for more freedom to sell and use pornography in spite of rape statistics, legalisation and decriminalisation of prostitution, deconstruction of marriage and family, more homosexual rights, sex tourism, condoms, and blatant advertising of licentious sex.

Health workers are forced against their will to violently remove tiny unborn babies from their mothers' wombs and carry their little bodies to incinerators, there is more freedom to gamble, no discipline for children who apparently are just naturally going to get the urge to do what is right and of course more protection for criminals and definitely no punishment. These are all rights protected under the Constitution and fiercely defended by politicians in the ANC, the DA and most other parties despite the disastrous consequences to family and society. Now then, how do we transform a society that demands every decadent freedom but despairs at the resulting chaos and destruction those freedoms inevitably bring?

This is a society which has bought the lie that the very laws, policies and behaviour that have morally bankrupted society will save it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON OF COMMITTEES: Hon member, your time has expired.

Mrs C DUDLEY: Chairperson, at this point I will protest the ridiculous silencing that small parties have to handle in terms of the three minutes. [Interjections.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON OF COMMITTEES: Hon member, your time has expired.

Mrs C DUDLEY: Chairperson, it is ridiculous. What can be said on this important subject in three minutes?
[Interjections.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON OF COMMITTEES: Order!

Mrs C DUDLEY: Chairperson, what can be said in three minutes? It is a life and death issue. [Interjections.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON OF COMMITTEES: Order!

Mrs C DUDLEY: Chairperson, it amounts to a silencing of any other voice. [Interjections.] [Time expired.]

Mnr P J GROENEWALD: Mnr die Voorsitter, ons is besig met 'n debat oor morele vernuwing om die sedelike karakter van die samelewing te herstel. As ons so 'n debat voer, dan moet
